“ Until we clear these records, it’s government that is effectively holding people back and impeding public safety. ”

— George Gascón, San Francisco District Attorney

Leveraging Clear My Record technology to fulfill the promise of Proposition 64

In May 2018, DA George Gascón and the San Francisco District Attorney's Office joined Code for America in the first partnership of its kind to leverage technology and user-centered design to proactively review criminal convictions that qualify for relief under Proposition 64 (marijuana legalization). Previously, people had to petition the court on their own, but this is a time-consuming, expensive, and confusing process.

With the aid of technology, a DA's office can dismiss or resentencing convictions proactively and automatically. This requires no action on the part of the individual, and minimal government staff time and resources — and reduces barriers to employment, housing, health, and education that hundreds of thousands of Californians face.

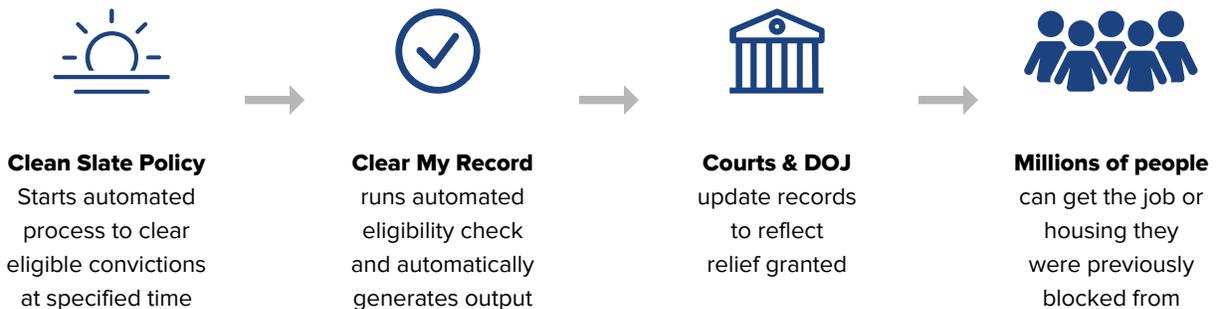

By providing proactive and automatic record clearance services, counties can address the wrongs caused by the failed war on drugs, felt most pronouncedly in communities of color, and fulfill the promise of the reforms aimed at remedying the legacy of mass incarceration in California.

Using technology to automatically clear criminal convictions demonstrates that government has the infrastructure to deliver relief to people in faster, more dignified ways—and the San Francisco District Attorney's Office and Code for America are leading the way.

How does Code for America's Clear My Record technology work?

Clear My Record is technology developed by Code for America that can automatically and securely evaluate eligibility for convictions by reading and interpreting conviction data. It can determine eligibility for thousands of convictions in just a few minutes.

This alleviates the need for DA staff to go through state criminal records one by one to evaluate eligibility, a time- and labor-intensive process. Streamlining conviction data processing will also make it easier for the courts to update records.
