

BREAKOUT #4

HOSPITALITY IS FAR MORE THAN ENTERTAINMENT

DAVE & SUE BOWERS

ROOM W241/242

In our culture, hospitality is understood most commonly as entertainment where we open our homes and share a meal with others. In doing so, we seek to make sure our guests are served the best we have to offer. We feel the pressure to provide a Pinterest-inspired cuisine, matching centerpiece, and just the right ambiance. We of course take a moment to post our spread on Instagram to be sure others know of our hospitality skills. But what if our homes can be used for so much more? What might it look like to think of hospitality as something more than entertainment?
