As we enter into the month of February with all the reminders of Valentine's Day, love is in the air! Valentine's Day is a holiday to affirm our love to others. We need to say it with actions and words. Nonverbal communication can have long-lasting effects on how children listen, behave, process information, and speak to others.

At the preschool, teachers communicate love in many ways. Our teachers are experts at making eye contact, giving smiles, thumbs up, hugs, high fives, and speaking and listening sincerely at the child's level.

How often do you speak love to your child? It is crucial that our children know we love them. We need to say the words, "I love you." We also need to show love. Infuse this powerful feeling into your child's life often. You will be blessed!

Check out, I Love You So by Marianne Richmond, a book that I read over and over with my boys. The author communicates an often indescribable steady, unconditional love and reassures children that love is forever.
