Archaeological Field Technicians and Historians– California

Provenience Group, Inc. (PGI) seeks to hire multiple archaeologists for upcoming fieldwork projects throughout California. Work will include various archaeological projects, including pedestrian surveys, site recordation, mapping, excavation, and construction monitoring. Applicants will be expected to be detail-oriented when completing field forms and reports. Projects will vary from small surveys and preparation of Section 106 reports to large-scale surveys and construction monitoring. Must be able to work independently and experience with GPS is preferred. Fieldwork may entail strenuous physical labor and walking over rough terrain and/or through dense brush.

At a minimum, an undergraduate degree in Anthropology/Archaeology and demonstrated experience working in archaeology is required, but M.A. level archaeologists are also needed for crew chief positions. PGI is also seeking individuals with a degree in history to assist with inventories and evaluations of historic resources.

Selected applicants will be home-based and not required to report to an office. Employment will be on-call to start, but may change to full-time in the future.

Compensation is commensurate with past experience, skills, education, and productivity.
