It’s possible you interact with Veterans, even currently serving military members, from food-insecure households. You may not be able to tell who is food insecure just by looking at a person, you have to ask. This course shows you how to approach the issue, and how to provide assistance.

MAZON: A Jewish Response to Hunger, a national anti-hunger organization working to end hunger among people of all faiths and backgrounds, and PsychArmor Institute, with additional support from the Block Family Foundation, debut the online course, “Food Insecurity: Bringing Solutions to the Table.”

The course is intended to help Veteran service providers understand this critical issue, ask the right questions and know where to refer the Veteran for help. Your efforts will help us work toward a solution to this solvable problem and ensure that no Veteran goes hungry. Senator Tammy Duckworth, both a Veteran and daughter of a Veteran, introduces the course by sharing her own food insecurity story.
