HC H20 Jacket

Review: HC H20 Jacket

By Scott Mares | Published Sep 13, 2013

We Liked

- Sleek fit
- Long sleeves
- Big back pocket

One of the things with rain jackets that we look for is how breathable they are. If you have a rain jacket from back in the day it was basically a piece of plastic that was sewn into a jacket with mesh side panels. Now a days the fabrics have gotten more high tech in their fabrics and construction. Fabrics now come with a water proof rating and a rating for breathability. Its always that fine balance of waterproofness and breathability that everyone is chasing. So now they are making jackets out of high tech fabrics that breath well, highly water proof and giving them vents as well. I like the way Mavic was thinking on this one. They thought outside the box or jacket in this case. Venting system is pretty cool: Arms, center, side

We Didn't Like

Ok so one of the great features of this jacket is that it has 2 front zippers. If you unzip the first one it will allow air into the jacket via the mesh mid strip. You must unzip the second one to totally take the jacket off. Now even though this feature works really well in helping ventilation we had problems zipping it back up when it was too much vent. The zipper was getting caught in the yellow center mesh.

The Final Say

So it comes down to how serious you are? Are you one of the hard men or women that trains regardless of the weather? Do have it in your head that when your not training some one else is and when you meet them they will beat you? If you are one of those people then you will appreciate this jacket and all of the features that it has. It is a little disappointing that the zipper gets stuck in the mesh but I guess that is kinda par for the course with that design. The Mavic HC H2O jacket is packed full of features that you probably wont find in the competition. The zipper vents on the arms is just one of them. I wish that they came in a few other colors like a bright blue or a orange. But at least they didn't make it in black or what I call invisible pedestrian. The bright Red is great and will offer you plenty of visibility in the rain so you can focus on turning the screw and not if your going to get hit by a car. Hup hup
