

MEXICAN SPOT BANDITO FITS INTO ITS POWER-LUNCH SURROUNDINGS

The energy might have shifted throughout the years—out to Summerlin, back Downtown—but there remains a long tradition of Vegas doing business at the cluster of restaurants radiating out from the intersection of Flamingo and Paradise roads. This is where power-lunch and happy-hour institutions like Firefly, Lawry’s, Del Frisco’s and Gordon Biersch dwell, and it hasn’t been easy for other eateries to join this exclusive, successful club. But Bandito, a breezy Mexican restaurant that opened over the summer in the Hughes Center, seems perfectly constructed to break through.

READ THE FULL STORY HERE