The essay is distinguished from many other works by creativity. Alas, we all know: the more freedom, the more responsibility. Obtaining this very freedom, you must think through the structure of the future essay yourself.

The structure

It depends on the goals, form, type, amount of work. The essay-narration will begin with a plot, the essay-illustration - with one or several theses. Essays such as "causal analysis" will have to build in accordance with the laws of logic.

The structure can simply be thought out. But it is better to take a sheet of paper and sketch out a rough plan. The plan is the "skeleton" of the text, on which you will build up the "flesh" later. Any text needs a plan; an essay is needed first. Do not worry if you do not have it. You can always buy an essay at essay for sale service.

By "introduction" and "conclusion" you can mean the first and last paragraph. Formal treatment of these elements of the text should not be. The first paragraph or the first part of the text introduces the reader to the course of the matter, brings him to the problem, which is devoted to the essay. You do not need a long introduction - one or two paragraphs will be quite enough.

Before you will be a detailed plan. The text "will grow" on it - and your essay will be almost ready. But before starting to work on the text, check whether the theses are arranged in a logical sequence and whether the evidence is sufficiently convincing.

The main part

This part requires the most attention. Especially when making a plan. It may have a different structure: Thesis-argument, thesis-argument, thesis-argument, etc. In this case, first fix the thought, then prove it; Reverse structure (fact-finding). We describe the situation or give the facts, we conclude. And so - several times.

Thesis and several facts. In this case, we confirm one thought with several illustrations.

By "thesis" we mean a short complete thought that the author wants to convey to the reader. This may be a life situation, news, opinion of a scientist, a scientific theory or a fact proven by science.

Ideally, one thesis should confirm two arguments. One reader may seem inconclusive, and three will overload the text. However, you are free to bring any arguments - much depends on the very thought, the logic of the narration, the volume, the plan of the text. It is important to preserve the consistency, brevity and imagery of the text.

The main part has to be according to the laws of logic. You can go from simple to complex, you can carry out analysis or synthesis, use the method of deduction and induction. To build a logical text:

- fix theses;
- pick up several arguments for each thesis;
- line up theses in a logical sequence: one thought should flow from another.

The conclusion

In conclusion, as a rule, they summarize everything that was said in the essay. The author together with the reader summarizes. It is important that the conclusions are not contrived and do not arise "out of nowhere." In conclusion - only what the reader should come to, having familiarized with the main part of your work.

What errors occur most often and how to fix them:

Having unsuccessful, ambiguous revolutions can spoil the overall impression of your work. To prevent this, carefully re-read the text before you submit it for review.

Do not use a large number of parts. It tires the reader, reduces concentration.

The lack of examples in the work is a sign that the author did not pay enough attention to the task, perhaps not fully comprehended the topic of the essay.

Focus on the main information, remember that the essay has a certain amount of words. It is not necessary to focus the attention of the reader on minor details.

Long sentences are not the key to success. Alternate long phrases with short ones - this is the best option that guarantees a positive rating.

You should not use terms that you are not familiar with. Inappropriate use of terminology will only draw attention to the poor awareness of the author and diminish the meaning of the essay.
