Craig Hospital

Craig Hospital is an entity comprised of many people who are the collective recipients of the Comp Laude® Medical Facility Award. Kenny Hosack, director of marketing and provider relations, accepted the award on the institution's behalf.

Craig is a world-renowned rehabilitation hospital specializing in the neuro-rehabilitation and research of patients with spinal cord injury and traumatic brain injury. Craig is a not-for-profit, free-standing, national center of excellence that has treated more than 31,000 patients with since 1956.

"I represent an institution where 50 percent of workers compensation patients with brain injuries go back to work," Hosack said with pride.

In recent years, Craig Hospital has gained recognition for the care of police officers and other first responders who suffer severely debilitating injuries in the line of duty. The hospital provides complex, intense rehab and support for injured officers and counseling programs for their family members. This supportive environment promotes recovery and functional independence.

Craig provides a comprehensive system of inpatient and outpatient medical care, rehabilitation and long-term follow-up services. According to a catastrophic medical management analyst who commented during the award nomination process: "Craig exemplifies the spirit of Comp Laude® in the way in which they strive to comprehensively treat the whole patient and recognize the unique challenges facing law enforcement and their families...In workers comp we strive to work collaboratively for the best possible functional outcome, and Craig embraces that process."

There is a common thread that former patients and families use to describe their experience at Craig: They are treated like family.
